Administration

Concept Note

Human rights are rights inherent to all human beings, whatever our nationality, place of residence, sex, ethnic origin, colour, religion, language, or any other status. These rights are all interrelated, interdependent and indivisible. The Constitution of India under Part III ensures fundamental right not only to Citizen of India but any person within the India. The Fundamental rights under the Indian constitution are basically Human Right in Nature. Human rights entail both rights and obligations. State assume obligations and duties not only under international law but also under constitution to respect and protect and to fulfill human rights. The obligation on the State is to take positive action to facilitate the enjoyment of basic human rights.

The criminal justice system is the set of norms and agencies followed by procedure by which a criminal undergoes and is punished accordingly, however, even being an accused or criminal a person enjoys certain human right and other rights. If we see historically then we find that concept of the punishment has changed over period of time influenced by legal notions such as concept of justice, concept of fair trial, theory of punishment, recognition of human rights. There are certain measures adopted by the legal system for the protection of the accused. There are certain legal theories established overtime for protection of the accused, such as Eiincumbit probatio, qui dicit non qui negat; cum per rerum naturam factum negantis probatio nulla sit. The general concept of the law is that the person is innocent until proved otherwise. Thus till the end of trial process accused basic rights should be protected and if he has been proved guilty of the offence he must be treated in a humane manner.
