THEME OF THE CONFERENCE

The 'Right to Know is the Right to Live'. Transparency and access to information is pivotal to the functioning of a democracy. An informed citizen is an empowered one. For this one should have free, unfettered access to information. The jurisprudence of Democracy revolves around the pure concept of 'accountability' which can only be achieved if people in authority and power are subject to public gaze and speculations.

India is considered as one of the largest democracy in the world. Every democracy is characterized by the virtues of transparency, accountability and openness to reform. Vast powers vested with the public authorities has led to maladministration, misuse of power and corruption, which necessitated the introduction of Right to Information Act, 2005. The Act further aims at establishing a healthy democracy and to bring about a responsive, accountable, and corruption-free government. However, RTI is much more than a tool to fight corruption. It is in fact a fundamental and transformatory right against the arbitrary use of power.

This Conference seeks to provide a comprehensive learning on the Right to Information, dealing with its multiple facets from a constitutional perspective to be a statutory right, and thereby its evolution as an executory right through administrative and judicial process.
