

1st Training Workshop on Child Care and Protection with special emphasis on POCSO Law

About the Initiative

Child abuse is a grave issue in our society. Instances of child abuse are either under-reported or are not adequately covered under child protection laws. A dearth of child-serving professionals adds to this misery. In addition to having an adequate number of experts, it is essential that they are skilled in reporting child abuse and neglect. The top-most priority for any State or organisation should be to put efforts to address violence against children. As per the 2011 Census, Women and children together constitute a total of 67.7% of the country's population.

According to the latest report by The Ministry of Women and Child Development a total of 7595 cases were registered under the POCSO Act. Uttar Pradesh (2973) topped the tally, followed by Bihar (511), Delhi (437), Haryana (411), Rajasthan (410) and Madhya Pradesh (374). Empowerment and protection of children, and ensuring their wholesome development is crucial for the sustainable and equitable development of our country.

These figures compel us to ponder over our existing laws and the duties of our enforcement agencies. The enactment of ‘The Protection of Children from Sexual Offences (POCSO) Act, 2012’ was formulated to reduce child abuse in India, but the improper implementation, lack of special courts combined with a lack of sensitization among Special Public Prosecutors and faulty investigation procedures, casts a shadow on the whole Justice System. In 2019, amendments to the POCSO Act extended the range of offences, seeking the death penalty in cases of aggravated penetrative sexual assault, and a gender neutral approach while delivering justice. Despite these amendments, the rate of child abuse in India unfortunately persists. With new forms of child abuses and harassment emerging, it is becoming a challenge to tackle such cases and devise new strategies to combat them.

Maharashtra National Law University, Mumbai (MNLU Mumbai) places considerable emphasis on research and training and thus aspires to be identified as a world class research and training University. This initiative at MNLU Mumbai is the result of the realization that training is generally a neglected territory even in the best of law schools. Even the creation of a chain of elite law schools around the world is largely unable to foster a culture of training and research at the grassroot level. The lack of skill, knowledge, legal awareness and competence in the area of Child Rights has contributed to the decay in understanding the handling of child victims. Enacting the POCSO Act, 2012 alone cannot become a source for considering and influencing policy matters, judicial reforms and judicial administration. Enforcement agencies and professionals working specifically in this area need to be trained and educated about how to handle victims and cases reported under this Act.

In this context, Centre for Advanced Legal Studies, Training & Research(CALSTR) and Centre for Information, Communications and Technology law (CICTL), and the PRO BONO Club were set up to contribute academic, research and training activities relating to existing, contemporary and futuristic law and policy which also includes providing pro bono services. The Centres and the Club aim to facilitate interdisciplinary Research, Learning strategies and training services. The Centres, in the past have conducted numerous Training and Research workshops and Conferences especially in the area of:

- a. Training Workshop on Electronic Evidence
- b. International Conference on “IoT and Law”
- c. Colloquium on "Dispute Resolution: Understanding challenges, approaches and opportunities in India and Singapore"
- d. Intermediary responsibility in the light of intermediary Rules 2021

Keeping the aforesaid view in mind the Centres have taken upon themselves to launch a capacity building initiative in a series of training programs for professionals in different streams.

About Project Mumbai

Project Mumbai is a not for profit model of public-private-people partnership that focuses on Healthcare, Environment, Governance, Education, Nutrition, Volunteerism and implementable solutions.

While Project Mumbai goes by the tag line 'Mumbai Ke Liye Kuchh Bhi Karega', it has during the pandemic worked across over 20 districts of Maharashtra alone. Apart from that, its adolescent emotional wellbeing helpline now caters to people in need from across 26 states.

Not just citizens but some of the best known corporates have worked closely and continue to support our initiatives which include the Tata group, State Bank of India, Asian Paints, Facebook, Uber, Unilever, Essar, Wipro, JP Morgan, Avendus, State Bank of India, just to name a few.

People of eminence including Amitabh Bachchan, Katrina Kaif, Alia Bhat, Vicky Kaushal, Ayushmann Khurana, Aamir Khan, John Abraham too are among those who have voluntarily contributed to our causes.

Project Mumbai works across spheres--with MCGM we are building a road mapping initiative, a large mental health initiative for school children, beautifying 150 roads of the city through volunteer driven painting, providing educational support to children who cannot afford school fees.

Project Mumbai is working at making Mumbai a city for all, which includes a city for the differently abled, a city for the elderly and a city safer for children.

Objectives

The core objective of the workshop is to develop skills of the participants in the areas of investigation, handling of children, role of Prosecutors, Police, social workers, teachers as well as scholars and applicability of POCSO laws through interactive practical sessions, visual aids and other technologies.

The proposed training interaction is to be geared to achieve the following objectives:

- To understand various forms of child abuse and its after effects
