Concept Note

Count her in!

Gender equity is a social responsibility for all and gender balanced world is the pre-requisite of sustainable social development. By treating the 'gender sensitivity as fairness' the conference proceeds with a sole aim of establishing gender equity. Though 'equality' and 'equity' both are used interchangeably, equality means giving same resources to all without discrimination whereas equity denotes the adjustment of the imbalances caused by inequality or sometimes by rigid equality. Equity is the need-based aspect of Equality. In that sense, equality is universal whereas equity is particularistic in nature. Being impressionistic, equality always gives different experience but equity unfurls the path of social justice. Gender equity is all about giving space to the women in different sectors instead of imposing decision on them by the name of equality. It means positive discrimination towards women by recognizing the needs and respecting gender identity.

Time has arrived to think of a world where all the individuals are treated equally. We can imagine a world which is free of bias, stereotype behaviour and discrimination. A world where inclusiveness and differences are celebrated. It is the need of the hour today to celebrate women's achievements in every sphere; we need to join our hands to reach the goal of gender equality and take action to drive gender parity.

When it comes to gender parity, India's position is dismal. According to the report of the World Economic Forum (WEF), India stands 127th out of 146 countries for gender parity in 2023. The country ranked 142th in Women's Economic Participation and Opportunity index. The gender gaps in political leadership are even wider with only 44.4% participation of women in local governance. Given the key role to policies in shaping social, cultural and political attitude, using a gender inclusive policy is a powerful tool to promote gender equity. The inclusion of women in decision making process involves eliminating discrimination, enacting legal structures and enabling policy reforms, promoting access to health, education, and finance, thereby assuring women empowerment in true sense. The necessity of the conference arises out of the fact that women need gender inclusive policies for their true empowerment, replacing the gender stereotypes.

Objectives

The primary objective of the conference is to provide a platform for the exchange of ideas and perspectives on promoting gender equity through a lens of inclusivity. We intend to invite participants who are working at the international and national level, legislators, civil society organizations, academicians, practitioners, researchers, activists and policymakers to deliberate and discuss the prerequisites to strengthen the society and to address the constraints and barriers of women to grow in a healthy environment.
