She has more than 11 years of blended experience in academics, research and industry and has published various Papers and Chapters in reputed Journals and Books. This Book is among her many efforts towards publishing authentic & bonafide research work on International Environmental Law.

About the Book

International environmental law comprises agreements and principles representing the global community's unified effort to tackle major environmental issues like climate change, ozone depletion, and the mass extinction of wildlife. Its broader goal is to achieve sustainable development, ensuring high living standards for present generations without compromising the quality of life for future generations. Thus, international environmental law is essential both for addressing specific environmental challenges and for embedding long-term environmental protection within the global economy. The book, “Navigating The Legal Landscape Of Environmental Challenges In The 21St Century” aims to identify and connect with various aspects of Environmental Laws that have evolved with the ever-changing times.

Editors are looking for high-quality contributions in the form of Book Chapters from Research Scholars, Academicians and Professionals from legal field and inter-disciplinary streams on Environmental Law. The Chapters must address the key issues pertaining to Environmental Concerns from National and International perspective.
