BACKGROUND AND RATIONALE

Sports have long been celebrated as a universal language that transcends cultural and national boundaries, fostering values of integrity, discipline, teamwork, and respect. However, the growing commercialization, competitive pressures, and technological advancements in sports have also led to challenges that threaten its core ethos. Sports epitomize human excellence, discipline, and fair competition. They transcend borders and unite societies under the shared values of integrity, respect, and inclusivity. Issues such as doping, match-fixing, abuse, harassment, and unsafe sporting environments have raised serious concerns regarding the integrity, fairness, and safety of athletes. However, the evolution of modern sport has also introduced complex ethical, legal, and scientific challenges.

The global movement towards clean and safe sports seeks to reinforce the moral and ethical foundations of sport by promoting integrity, fairness, and athlete welfare. "Clean sport" represents a commitment to doping-free, transparent, and ethical competition, while "safe sport" ensures protection from abuse, harassment, and other threats to athlete well-being. Emerging technologies such as neuro-enhancement and gene editing further complicate the landscape thereby raising profound ethical and regulatory questions.

In light of these challenges, the UNESCO Chair for Legal Dimensions of Clean Sports at National Law University is organizing an International Conference on "Clean and Safe Sports." This Conference aims to bring together scholars, policymakers, sports administrators, legal experts, ethicists, and athletes to critically deliberate on the multifaceted dimensions of clean and safe sporting practices.
