Message from the Vertical Head

Teaching and learning law is not confined to bare acts, case laws, or statutory provisions - it is a lifelong journey shaped by experience and practice, because once a student of law, always a student of law, and whether one becomes a judge, civil servant, prosecutor, or lawyer, the learning of law continues endlessly, evolving with every stage of one’s career, and even after working for years people can still consider themselves students of law; with this philosophy in mind, and recognising the vast scope of legal education, we are launching a specialised LL.M. programme designed for judicial officers, prosecutors, and civil servants, and this unique course, the first of its kind, will be taught by some of the finest minds in the field, including retired judges, senior public prosecutors, and distinguished lawyers, promising not only academic rigor but also practical insights drawn from decades of professional experience.
